THE REWARD OF BRAVERY; OR, THE ESCAPED CONVICT.

"Will you ever give up these trips, Terrence? It is so lonely starting here at night, and besides I am fearful that some one will break in, rob the house and murder us all. I never say my prayers and go to bed without trembling for my own life, and that of the children," and the little woman hung upon the arm of the strong man and begged him, with tearful eyes, to give up his wandering life (that of a peddler) and settle down.

"As soon as I have gathered enough together to buy me a bit of ground, or, what would be better still, to emigrate to America—that blessed land, where as the song says, 'there's bread and work for all,' and the bright sun is always shining, I'll gladly give up the path, for it is no easy work at the best."

"Only think of the money you have in the house now, husband dear? Surely there is enough to take us across the sea—you and me and the children and Bridget too, if she likes to go."

Bridget was the servant girl who helped the wife of the peddler and was her sole companion when he was away, and her eyes snapped with apparent delight when she heard the proposition. But she said nothing, and "master" continued:

"It is true for you, Kathleen, that I have a matter of a hundred pounds or so, which I will leave for you to take care of, and if I have good luck this trip I promise you to remain at home or go to America, bless her. It's a good friend she has been to Ireland, and many is the poor soul who has kept from starving. So take good care of the gold and children, Kathleen—you and Bridget, until I come back," and he kissed his wife and bright-eyed and curly-headed baby, and Bridget the good-bye, and shouldered his pack, and strode stoutly away, whistling merrily.

His heart was light, his form strong, he had none of the fears of his wife, and was looking forward joyfully to the time when he could have a little home, a pig and a cow and a patch of potatoes, that would belong to him alone, and over which no heard-hearted steward or non-resident landlord could claim control, although he would willingly pay his tithes to the church.

Terrence O'Brien was a peddler by profession, and was called a "foreign" man. His family consisted of a wife, two children, a boy nearly three years, a babe, and the girl of all work, Bridget. At the start of his married life he had rented a little cottage that stood in a lonely, out of the way place; although he had increased his stores, he had retained possession of it, on the score of economy.

A brave, athletic man, and one who feared nothing human, he could not understand the terrors of his little Kathleen—in fact he gave them little thought. Besides, robbery was a thing unknown among the peasant, and who would ever dream of his having a large amount of money in his wretched cabin? But this was not his custom to do so. Usually he deposited it in a secure place. So he gave the matter no further thought than to promise himself that this should be his last journey (if he did as well as he anticipated) and he turned around, flitting the way checked girls into purchasing fiery with which to dazzle the eyes of their beaux at the next fair.

With Kathleen, however, it was different. "As the night began to draw near and the wind to creep round the corners of the chimney with a mournful sound, she bethought herself of the sovereign her husband had left, and taking the bag in which they were kept from the cupboard over the fire place, she carefully tucked it between the beds, remarking at the same time, to Bridget, "that no one would ever think of looking there for it."

"No," was the reply. "It would be a smart man, sure, that would be looking under the chiller to find gold."

The tea over, they were early sleepers as well as early risers, the girl requested that she might be allowed to pass the evening with her sister, and she remained about a mile distant, and the anxious wife and mother, although loathing to do so, at length consented, insisting upon an early return.

"But you will be back early, Bridget?"

"Ay, course I will that same. But don't be after fretting." And the girl departed.

The lone woman busied herself at best she might until a late hour; but the girl did not return. In fever of anxiety, two cratches and her lonely full wistful minutes had passed, and although it appeared to her like half a day; and then considering it useless to remain any longer, sought her own pillow, after commending herself to Him who is the protector of the widow and the fatherless. But she had not closed her eyes before there was a loud rap upon the door.

"Is that you Bridget?" she asked hopefully.

"No," was the answer, and her heart sank like lead within her. "No, I am a stranger—have lost my way; you must let me in."

"You need have no fear. As there is a God in Heaven I will not harm you. I am an escaped convict—an innocent one—and as you have mercy in your heart, open the door."

Where was such an appeal made to an Irish heart in vain? An escaped convict, and wanting succor? That is the tallman to open every door—

Lion Killed in Mississippi.

From a gentleman of our city, who conversed with a person that knows of what he speaks, we obtain information of an extraordinary event occurring in Monroe county last week. Mr. George Coleman, a young man of twenty-three or twenty-four, living three miles from Prairie Station, was informed one day last week by a servant girl that she had just seen a "bear as big as a cow in the edge of the woods," a short distance from Mr. Coleman's place. Her excited manner at once roused his curiosity and arming himself with his Spencer rifle, loaded with twelve balls, he started out in search of the monster. He was accompanied by a servant and a large and a very fierce bull dog. Arriving at the spot, a brief survey soon discovered to him the object of his search in the shape of a genuine lion.

The beast at the sight of the man, sprang into the branches of a dead tree, and there waited further development. Mr. Coleman, who is described as very cool and daring, did not allow him to wait long, for elevating his rifle, he at once discharged several loads at him, which caused the beast to spring from his position on his foe. Quick as thought, Mr. Coleman continued firing till he had exhausted all his charges, the second shot, as he afterward discovered, passing clear through the body of the beast without disabling him. And now came the tug of war. The lion, infuriated with his wound, and with glaring eyes, reached the ground near Mr. Coleman at the first leap, and made a second spring a moment afterward. Nothing but the courage of his dog saved Mr. C. from instant destruction. The noble animal threw himself on the king of beasts, and he reached his victim, and seizing him by the nose, though known as a feather, fought him so resolutely that the lion abandoned his purpose, and by a single bound, seated himself on the lower limb of a tree about twelve feet from the ground.

At this moment Mr. Coleman's servant handed him a double barreled gun, which he had brought along; he advanced almost immediately under the beast, took an aim that was fired both barrels, and brought the lion down to the ground.

On measurement the lion was found to be nearly nine feet in length, and to weigh one hundred and eighty pounds. He had a white spot on his breast, was a tawny color, and showed a few black hairs.

Dr. Hurd of Monroe, who is considerably skilled in natural history, says there is no doubt of his species, and has his head for preservation. Our readers are assured there is no humbug about the affair. The only way we can account for the presence of a lion in this country is to identify this one with the animal that escaped from the manager at Forrest, Mississippi, about two weeks since. Both are described as males, and of ferocious temper.—Columbus (Miss) Index, April 28th.

General Sherman Makes an Explanation.

The Tribune has a letter from W. T. Sherman in relation to his action at the surrender of Gen. Johnston. He says in an interview to President Lincoln, and himself, the position of affairs, and the then soon probable defeat of the rebel army under Gen. Lee, President Lincoln expressed the hope that no more blood should be shed, and that he wished being the dispersing of the armies and the resumption of civil life. Gen. Sherman says that he drew up the terms of Johnston's surrender, himself, that he had no objection to do with Breckinridge, and that he proceeded to effect his escape from the country, a course that Sherman believes Lincoln would have approved.

Gen. Sherman says he makes these statements in order that there shall be no construction of terms whereby the course pursued by him should be thrown upon President Lincoln.

A Tough One.

"Talking about bed-bugs," said Bill Jones, who had been across the plains, "you should have seen some of the critters I met in Idaho last spring. I stopped one night with some settlers, who lived in a log cabin in a containing only one room and a loft. When it came time to go to bed they strung a blanket across the middle of the room, and the settler's family slept on one side of it and gave me a berth on the other side. I lay out. I tried to kiver up and keep away from 'em, but the pesky varmints would catch hold of the bed clothes and pull them off from me. They didn't think of nothing of dragging me round the room if I held on. I let 'em till about midnight, and then I looked around for a way to escape. There was a ladder reaching up to the loft, and I thought the best way to get away from the bloodsuckers was to climb up that. There wasn't any bugs in the loft, so I laid down, congratulating myself on my escape. Pretty quick I heard the ladder squeak as if somebody was coming up. Blinking I saw a big bug raise his head up through the hole in the loft. I looked down and the bloodthirsty creature exclaimed: 'Come up, boys, he's here!'"

About Money.

My chum pulled out of his pocket a half sheet of paper, folded like the back of an old letter, and began reading the notes there, in a slow and contentions way: "Money is the concentrated essence of labor. A man who has a thousand dollars has a thousand days' work in his own hand. If he knows its value he can move about among men with the force of a thousand laborers—that is, with a hundred and twenty horse power. To know the force of money, one must know labor."

"When one man has money, and another has not, they contend for its possession. This is trade or robbery, according to circumstances."

"There are three uses for money—the use of getting it, the use of keeping it, and the use of spending it. Consequently it classifies the bulk of mankind into money-getters, money-keepers, and money-spenders. Except the misers we read of in novels, men do not love money for itself, any more than soup-tickets, or baggage checks, or promissory notes, or title deeds. The love of money is the pleasure of mental function in getting or keeping or spending. The sponge and the spendthrift are equally guilty with the miser."

"The class of money-getters includes merchants, gold miners, pick-pockets, politicians, and professional beggars. Americans are great money-getters, but they do not care to keep. Hence this is a country of great incomes, but small fortunes."

"The class of money-keepers is small. Literary men are not to be in it. Lawyers are good at keeping money, particularly if it is other people's. Money, like some other essences, has a pungent, sweet, taste; but to keep must be corked tightly. It evaporates in the open air, and the vapor is called interest. A mortgage is a condensing instrument, which enables a money keeper to evaporate a money spender."

"The classes of money spenders includes the majority of mankind. It is natural to spend money before we get it. We are all born to this, and cost a great deal before we earn anything. The power to get into debt is essential to the happiness of all civilized people, including most of the Governments of Europe. College students and married women, who have no legal capacity to bind themselves, satisfy this propensity by getting their fathers and husbands into debt if possible."

"Money is like gun powder. To make misdeeds, charges should be careful. Explosive power depends on the tightness with which you hold it. Scattered loose, it fizzles away with no effect."

"To become wealthy one must both get and keep. To be useful the wealthy man must be also a judicious money-spender."

Important to Soldiers.

The act of Congress of July 23, 1866, granting additional bounty to soldiers was so construed by the authorities at Washington, that unless the soldier had served two years, or been discharged on account of wounds received in time of duty, he was not entitled to bounty. An act was passed March 3, 1869, by Congress, removing this disability, which is given below:

Act of MARCH 3, 1869.—Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That when a soldier's discharge states that he is discharged by reason of "expatriation," or "discharge," he shall be held to have completed the full term of his enlistment and entitled to bounty accordingly.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the widow, minor children, or parents, in the order named, of any soldier who shall have died, after being honorably discharged from the military services of the United States shall be entitled to the additional bounty, to which such soldier would be entitled if living, under the provisions of the twelfth and thirteenth sections of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the government for the year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, and for other purposes," approved July twenty-eight, eighteen hundred and sixty-six, and the said provisions of said act shall be so construed.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all claims for the additional bounties granted in sections twelfth and thirteenth of the act of July 23, 1866, shall, after the first day of May next, be adjusted and settled by the accounting officers of the Treasury under the provisions of said act, and all such claims as may on the said last day of May, be remaining in the office of the paymaster-general, unsettled, shall be transferred to the second auditor for settlement.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That all claims for bounty under the provisions of the act entitled in the foregoing sections, shall be void unless presented in due form, prior to the first day of December, 1869.

A young man asked a young lady if she would let him spend the evening with her. "No," she angrily replied, "that's what I won't." "Why," replied he, "you needn't be so fussy; I didn't mean this evening, but some stormy one, when I can't go anywhere else."

A lady in Belfast, Ireland, after questioning the children of a charity school about what the wife of a King or Emperor was called, asked, "What is the wife of a duke called?" "A drake!" exclaimed several voices.
